Although the wars between Britain and Germany could be considered "a single war," they would lead to the creation of nations like Denmark (1857), the Netherlands (1865), and Belgium (1898). Today, all five of these countries live largely on the borders of Europe — and are, in many ways, part of Europe as we know it today as well. To date, the countries of the Netherlands (the Netherlands Antilles) have not experienced a civil war, since there have been no political conflicts between the two nations, unlike modern-day Syria, Libya, and Egypt. There are over 6,000 Dutch nationalities, many of which have settled in the city of Amstel for generations. Dutch culture, history, and economy are similar to Europe at large; but like many other Europeans, Dutch are more interested in Dutch-language newspapers than Dutch culture.. Despite the vast geographical distance and the cultural distance, the four countries of the Netherlands enjoy good relations with their continental neighbors. The most powerful of all Dutch is the Netherlands Antilles, though, much has changed over the past century and all these years, a friendship has developed that has brought the two countries together again, as we mentioned for free,..
